NAN TOOK LUCKY RABBIT'S FOOT

Miss Patterson Retained Talisman From Tombs.

ENDOWED WITH GREAT CHARM

All Alleged Murderers Wearing It Before They Were Placed on Trial Were Acquitted.

NEW YORK, Aug. IS.—Perhaps it is just a little oversight on the part of Nan Patterson, or maybe she wished to keep the "mascot" because of the memories it recalled. At any rate, memories it recalled. At any rate, S2.500.

Wanden Flynn, of the Tombs, and John Price, $2.500.

Ret. nw., six rooms and bath. Rents $20. Price, $2.500. NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Perhaps it is G. Jones, the caterer of the prison, are anxious to have the fact brought to the attention of the former "Florodora" 3d st. nw., 6 rooms, bath, and stable; price, $3,300.

Those who befriended Nan in prison do not believe she intends to keep the rabbit's foot, but they say it is highly thoughtless of her, not to say unfeeling, to keep it when others are in great need of its potent influence. Nan, it is said, has received the full benefit of the charm, and, remembering her own ex-periences, she should not hesitate to turn it over to somebody whose future as dark as hers was three months

There is a long history attached to the rabbit's foot, and the Tombs men say no one who has worn it, with the exception of Roland B. Molineux, ever was convicted. And Molineux, it is pointed out, finally was acquitted.

Wore It on Gold Chain.

Miss Patterson wore the rabbit's foot suspended from her neck by a long gold chain throughout the three trials. It was handed to her by Jones, who told her it had been worn by more than ozen persons charged with murder in the first degree, and none of them had Leen convicted. The young woman grabbed at the talisman like a drown-grabbed at the talisman like a drowning person at a life preserver, and never took it from her neck until she was released from prison. It had become a tradition in the prison that the talisman was to be worn only by those who, in the opinion of the cateror, were deserving of its magic influence.

The rabbit's foot was brought into the prison about twelve years ago by a negro charged with having murdered his wife. On his first trial the jury stood eleven for conviction and one for acquittal. He was placed on trial again, and the jury stood seven for conviction and five for acquittal. A third trial resulted in another disagreement, and he was not tried again. On the day he left the prison on his own recognizance he handed to another prisoner, also charged with murder in the first degree, the little rabbit's foot.

"It brought me luck," the negro said, "and you'll never be convicted if you wear it."

The man took the charm and wore it timt in his trial which lested just one determined to another the conviction in the first opening the little rabbit is foot.

wear it."

The man took the charm and wore it until his trial, which lasted just one day. When the evidence of the prosecution was all in Recorder Smyth took the case from the jury and discharged the defendant.

Patrick Scorned It. The next prisoner to wear it was an Italian woman charged with having murdered her sweetheart. She was de-fended by Emanuel Friend, who referred to the rabbit's foot in a half joeular manner in his summing up. The jury brought in a verdict of not guilty. The furred paw then passed down The furred paw then passed down from prisoner to prisoner until the arrival of Albert T. Patrick. The foot was offered to him by the caterer, but he refused it. He said he was not superstitious. Patrick was convicted of murder in the first degree, and the court of appeals sustained the conviction.

When Nan Patterson took the rabbit's foot she promised to return it as soon as she was freed. But when she was leaving the prison she neglected to hand it back, and Jones forgot to ask for it. He remembered it the next day, but he said remembered it the next day, but he said yesterday he had been unable to find Miss Patterson and ask her for it.

Jones is anxious to turn the rabbit's foot over to Bertha Claiche, who he thinks is sadly in need of it. The young woman, the caterer believes, is deserving of her freedom, though she killed the man who wronged her. Without the talisman, Jones does not think it will be possible for her to escape conviction, so he is particularly anxious to have the fact that it is missing from its proper place brought to Miss Patterson's attention.

Another peculiar fact associated with TIMES WANT ADS he charm is that a man named Albert. Patrick was offered the use of it, but that he scorned it and was convicted of murder in the first degree, and the court sustained the conviction.

Nan Thought Rabbit's

Foot Was a Hoodoo

Elayton, on Fourteenth street, where the is stooping, but Mr Patterson, her father, told the following story concerning the rabbit's foot charm, which was given to the young "Florodora" actress by Mr. Jones, the caterer of the Tombs is New York:

"When Nan was taken to the Tombs, Mr. Jones, believing her innocent of the crime of which she was charged, gave her the silver mounted rabbit's foot as a massoot, firmly believing that, without its potent power, my daughter could never be freed.

"It is true that Nan took the charm and furthermore on several occasions she carried it with her, but as for wearing it around her neck continuously, the facts are exaggerated.

"It is true that Nan took the charm and furthermore on several occasions she carried it with her, but as for wearing it around her neck continuously, the facts are exaggerated.

"Indeed, after her first two trials, she came to regard the object in the light of a hoodoo and suggested throwing it sway, but I told her that such an action might wound the feelings of the officials and would do no good.

"After that she decided to keep it among her things and, whether she carried it after that, I do not know.

"I must have forgotten the incident under my great stress of excitement over my daughter's release, for the matter had slipped my mind until recalled last night by Nan's words. The foot is now in one of her trunks which are in storage in New York and, upon her return there, will be sent to Mr. Jones.
